As more than 500 Upland seniors prepared to graduate last week, Valedictorian John Streck warned them not to make swimming pools and BMWs their priorities, but to concentrate on helping others.

He told the future graduates and an audience of about 3,500 that materialism has run rampant in the world.

"An example of this can be seen in one of my favorite Tshirt philosophies, 'He who dies with the most toys, wins.' That pariticular saying is such a perfect definition of life today — one vast aim of accumulation," he said.

Instead of being at the head of the line for material goods, Streck advised, graduates should put themselves at the end of the line and concentrate on serving Jesus Christ.

"So when the call is heard, you'll be ready," he said. "At the same time realize this is not an advocation of laziness, but rather a challenge to succeed in what could possibly be the hardest thing you ever attempt.

"To truly be at the end of the line is not to sit back and wait for what life brings, but rather to work night and day with all your strength not to acquire but to give," he said.

Co-salutatorians at the nearly 2½-hour ceremony were Jennifer Low and Steven Clinard. Senior class President Walter Hamada also gave a speech.

After her retirement, Lois Saltgaver won't be sitting around. She plans to travel across the country with her husband in their new travel trailer.

Citrus School secretary will retire early to tour the U.S.

By Kimberly Heinrichs

After 20 years of sitting at the secretary's desk at Citrus School, Lois Saltgaver calls it "my school."

But the 60-year-old Upland resident has decided to call it a day and retire early in order to tour the United States with her husband in their brand-new trailer.

She will take with her a lot of good memories,

"It's been a real nice experience," she said "The Upland School District is very special." Not only does this cheerful veteran know the names of the students at the school, she often knows the names of their parents. After all, for many of them, she was their school secretary once.

Saltgaver said it's fun to see the children of the children she once knew.

"I call them my grandstudents," she said.
During her twenty years, Saltgaver has acquired the affection of staff and PTA members, as well as students. This is evidenced by the banners draped and cards propped up around her office, wishing her a happy retirement.

Want to tell world of baby's arrival? Try Rent-A-Stork

By Suzanne Sproul

Michel Cruz has several storks she's willing to rent — cheap.

Cruz, an Ontario mother of two, has launched a wooden Rent-A-Stork sign business out of her home, installing them for a fee

"About two months ago I got this idea to come up with a novel way of announcing the birth of a baby. I really wondered about doing it after the birth of my son, Cole, but didn't do anything until recently," Cruz said.

She said she was looking for a way of bringing in some extra money while still being able to stay home with her children.

"I started thinking that all a person's neighbors want to know about the baby. I mean, even if they don't know you they've seen you pregnant for nine months and are wondering what happened.

"The signs help answer their questions and save a mother from having to answer the same questions over and over again," she said.

So Cruz and her husband bought some plywood and started to research exactly what a stork looked like. After they found a picture of the bird famous for bringing bundles of joy to people's homes, they asked a friend to paint one.

The couple then reproduced the work themselves onto about a three-foot-high sign.

The white stork carries a bundle in his beak. On his outstretched wings is the message "It's a boy" or "It's a girl" and pertinent information about the baby: Name, birth date, weight and length.

"We'll rent the signs for $5 per day with a minimum of three days. All a family has to do is call us and we'll deliver the sign, install it for however long the people want and then we'll remove it," Cruz said.

Although Cruz's small business includes delivery, the idea of different public birth announcements isn't new.

Several companies have been selling "It's a Boy" and "It's a Girl" signs or banners for some time. A Nebraska hospital recently even got into the act. The hospital's wooden storks go for $27.50.

Newton's Hallmark Center in the Montclair Plaza sells white/ pink and white/blue banners for 50 cents.

"Most everyone comes in to buy them. I think more men do, though," said Margot Wilcox, Hallmark employee.

She said the banners have been popular but are just a fad.

"They're in vogue now but I think they'll be out again soon," Wilcox said.

The Bear Paper Co. Inc. in Ontario has sold items related to announcing new births for the past five years, according to Jack Jones, company owner.

Upland parking lot to get facelift, use to be limited

The parking lot serving Upland City Hall and the City Library is getting a facelift.

There will be limited use of the lot during construction. Fifty spaces will be available for visitors' use, while city employees will be parking elsewhere during that period.

Access to the lot will be from Arrow Highway for two weeks.

After that, patrons will have to enter from D Street until completion of the project, which is estimated in about two months.

After the period of inconvenience, city officials said, the new parking lot will be enlarged and will make better use of the area for parking by both employees and the public.

Decisions on Upland budget delayed

After more than three hours of discussion, the Upland City Council postponed a decision on its $36.5 million budget for 1986-87 until next Monday.

Most of the questions and comments during the public hearing came from Mayor Richard Anderson, who went through the document department by department. He had made 150 notations of concern on his copy, he said.

Most of his concern centered around increased expenditures, particularly in personnel. Costs for new and reclassified positions were not included in the budget.

Led by Anderson, the council decided to scrap a new position called Disaster Preparedness Coordinator requested by Fire Chief Gary Edwards in reaction to state and county pressures.

City Manager Lee Travers characterized the position, which would have a salary of about $28,800 with benefits included, as a costly position that is not needed by the city.

The coordinator would make plans for the different city departments to interact in case of a major disaster. Currently the City Manager's office works with the fire department on such Travers said that the state once reimbursed half the salary, but added that the Gramm-Rudman Act might change that.

"The state, it appears to me, has discovered disaster preparedness and gotten wildly enthused, as has the county," Travers said. "I never felt it was worth it to pay even half of the salary.

Another position questioned by the mayor was that of a new planning aide. Acting Planning Director Jeff Bloom requested the additional paraprofessional position to lighten the load on the professional planning staff.

Bloom said that having the professional staff doing work such as making maps and sketches was not using their time efficiently. In addition, he said that sometimes his staff simply did not have time to do

However, Anderson said that the position, which would have paid $25,457 including benefits, would have been too much.

"We would end up locking ourselves in with a full-time employee that we only need parttime," he said, suggesting that, instead, the city take $10,000 and allow the Planning Department to hire part-time help when needed. The council would then review the situation in six months.

Although the budget increased 20.28 percent overall from last year, the operating budget - which includes salaries and the cost of running the departments - increased only 12.19 percent. On the other hand, the capital improvement projects fund jumped 44.42 percent

However, Anderson sought to increase that still further by suggesting that the city beef up its budget for street improvements, tree trimming and storm drains.

"That question, 'Why do we trim the trees the way we do?' might be the most asked question since I've been on council with almost 100 percent critical (responses), Councilman Al Canestro agreed.

Because the city has only 11 workers to trim 50,000 trees and because of liability problems from overhanging branches, the city has been trimming its trees heavily every three years.

Retirement at center stage for drama teacher administrators. There's no

By Stuart Dedic

On his lunch break at Pomona High School 24 years ago, Ralph Strane decided to become a college teacher. So he went to Chaffey College without an appointment and got hired.

"Right away I started bargaining about the salary and stuff," he recalled. "But if I would have known the difference between teaching high school and teaching college, I would have gotten down on my hands and knees and begged them."

Strane closed out his "extremely rewarding career" at Chaffey last week when school recessed for summer.

Strane, 60, a speech communications and fine arts professor, practically started the college's theater program from scratch.

"When I first started I was the whole theater department," he said. "It's grown a great deal."

Strane said the theater department's growth was just part of a massive expansion of the college, an advancement he said may have gone unnoticed by the community.

"We've gone through a period where the community hasn't noticed what the college is," he said. "It's too bad because (the college) is extremely valuable for the community."

The college and community were a lot closer at one time, Strane said.

"The theater department used to put on performances for the community," he said. "I almost got arrested twice because there were about three times the amount of people I was supposed to have in the building (for the shows)."

Strane, who performed in several musicals throughout the country after finishing his undergraduate work at Pepperdine University, said teaching was always a goal.

"I was never going to be a big star." he said. "Unless you are, you don't make any money.

So after Strane earned his master's degree he began teaching, first at the junior high level, then at Pomona High.

But it wasn't until he was hired at Chaffey College that Strane settled in the education

And in in his years at the college, Strane said, he has seen students change - dramatically.

"In the '60s they were all interested in political causes. They weren't the least bit interested in religion, family or anything," he said. "Now they're swinging against alcohol and drugs. They're not telling you to re-legalize everything. They're much more interested in doing well in education.'

Still, Strane said, there are some students "I just want to grab and shake because they're not doing what they can."

"I worry a lot about our country not being able to stand up technologically to a lot of countries in the world," Strane said. "Without education, we Teaching has changed, too, and Strane said he doesn't like the less personal approach Chaffey has taken on. "It's changed - at least at Chaffey," he said. "It's more of a business than a profession.

"There was a time when if a teacher did something outstanding — putting in that extra effort — the next day the president (of the college) came over and thanked you.

Sons compose song about hostage father

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A little more than a year ago Paul Jacobsen and his fiance were preparing for their wedding when his father was kidnapped

Now the Upland resident has helped his brother Eric record a song about their father's captivity in the hopes that it will encourage the public to pressure the U.S. government for his release.

Called "When the Word Comes," the song was composed by the two brothers and is performed by Eric, who lives in Huntington Beach.

Proceeds from the record go to the National Organization for Victims' Assistance to help pay for the efforts of hostage families to free their relatives.

David Jacobsen, 55, then director of the American University Hospital in Beirut, was captured last year as he walked across the street between the medical center and the American University of Beirut

Since then they have heard twice from their father. The last time was a letter in November part of a packet that was thrown from a moving car in front of the Associated Press office in Beirut.

In the letter, he said he was being held in a small windowless room with hostages Terry Anderson, Rev. Lawrence Jenco and Thomas Sutherland. He was not being tortured, he said.

A fifth American hostage, William Buckley, has been said to be killed, but no body has been found. Two others have

36 Chaffey College retirees given sendoff at Ontario fete

A group of retirees from Chaffey College got a big sendoff Saturday night at Ontario's Red Lion

Thirty-six people, including teachers, an administrator and non-teaching employees were included in the group.

Stanford talked about the future plans of the retirees.

'I know (Ralph) Strane has plans to win a Nobel Prize for clearing his throat," Stanford joked about the 24-year Chaffey College veteran, who taught speech, communications and fine

Governing board President Isabel Scully also handed out awards to 46 people who had 10, 20 and 30 years of service at the college, most of them not retirees.

Although the hotel's staff claimed the air conditioning was working, jackets came off and some people were fanning themselves as the ballroom grew warmer.

One retiree took some time out to joke about

"As the senior member of this staff, I'd like to say something," said math teacher Rodney Arner. who is leaving with 38 years at the college under his belt. "I was 62 when I walked in and with no

Keep R.C. old, new in balance: Sceranka

By Andrew Horan

Calling controlled growth the key to Rancho Cucamonga's future, developer Jeffrey C. Sceranka launched his campaign for the Rancho Cucamonga City Council with an early morning press conference Monday.

"I think anyone who was raised in Southern California has a fear of uncontrolled growth," the 35-year-old marketing vice president for Barton Development said.

"I feel very strongly that the city is moving in the right direction," he added, "but I think it's important that there be balance" between the new and the old.

Striking that balance will allow the young city to develop a new sense of community, he said, while maintaining the heritage of the three villages that merged to form Rancho Cucamonga in 1977

"It is my commitment to the preservation and ... enhancement of our rural quality of life that motivates me to seek office," Sceranka said in a prepared statement.

But while he savors the town's rural flavor, Sceranka also would "create a dynamic service, retail and office core ... in our new downtown," encourgage retail development by securing "a regional shopping center" and increase employment opportunities by promoting "location of industry within our specific planned industrial area," according to his statement.

Like most other politicians in the city, Sceranka, who served on the planning commission from 1980-1982, favors building more parks and recreation centers.

"Those things are going to make the difference for our children over the years," the father of two said. "That's what makes growth work. Parks will make the difference."

Sceranka, who plans to spend between $10,000 and $15,000 on his campaign, said the city needs to develop more sophisticated methods of financing basic improvements.

Three new judges proposed to meet increased demand

The West Valley would receive three of four new judgeships proposed for the county last week to meet the increased demand of the county's growing population.

The Board of Supervisors last week approved a resolution backing legislation to create the judgeships.

The resolution supports the new positions on condition that they not be created until the county determines it can finance the judgeships, according to Freddie Hancock, municipal court administrator.

It will cost the county approximately $650,000 to create each of the judgeships, which include support personnel such as bailiffs, secretaries and clerks.

Because of the cost, another new judgeship, already authorized by the legislature, has not been implemented.

Including the one unfilled position, there are currently 22 judgeships and two commissioners in the county's municipal court system.

Hancock said a study by the Council of Municipal Court Judges found that the county should have 27 judgeships, based on the existing workload, .

The study also determined the priority of assignments based on workload of the different court districts.

Based on that study, the council earlier recommended that the one judgeship already approved should be assigned to the Fontana Courthouse.

Based on the same priority list, the next judgeship created should be assigned to the Chino Courthouse, the next to the Ontario Courthouse, the next to the Central Courthouse and the last one to Ontario, Hancock told the supervisors.

The presiding judge of the Municipal Court, Kenneth Kloepfer, told supervisors that, based on the ratio of judges to workload, the Municipal Court is currently at 85 percent of the level of the county's Superior Court system.

"The Municipal Court is the most visible branch of the courts in the county," Kloepfer said. "We get hundreds of thousands of people who come before us each year. It's important that we keep up with the volume and numbers to provide the services that are needed."

Alta Loma cable-TV subscribers air gripes

By Andrew Horan

Twenty-five people found themselves hanging in limbo last week.

The group of Alta Loma residents gathered at the Lions Community Center in Rancho Cucamonga to air a long list of complaints about cable television service they say has been unreliable for more than 10 years.

Their complaints ranged from blackouts for days at a time to waiting up to 45 minutes on the phone to register complaints.

"If we can't call (to complain)," one resident said, "we can't qualify" for credits against monthly bills that range as high as $46.

Earlene Ausley, an Upland resident, attended for another reason.

"They offered to connect the house for free," she said before the meeting started. "I came to see if we should take it."

Most in the angry crowd were determined not to take it any longer.

The group is among an estimated 700 Alta Loma residents who must rely on Foothill Cablevision Co. of Glendora for television programs, since regular reception is blocked by the mountains.

But a strange twist linked to the formation of Rancho Cucamonga from disparate communities in 1977 has left the residents caught in the crossfire of a battle between the city and the county

Mark Lorimer, a Rancho Cucamonga administrative analyst, tried to explain the situation to residents.

"Foothill Cablevision is one of four cable firms operating in the city," he said, but "it is franchised through the county.

"The city is not now technically enforcing the cable franchise," he continued, "because the county is still collecting franchise fees."

While the county maintains it is the city's responsibility to regulate Foothill, the firm's subscribers are left in the lurch.

Needs Assessment Survey will be held

The San Bernardino County
Office on Aging and the West Valley Regional Council on Aging will conduct a Needs Assessment Survey to determine the service needs of Senior Citizens on July 10 at 9:30 a.m. in the Community Center, 225 E. B
St., Ontario.

The public is encouraged to attend these meetings, as they provide an opportunity for the Office of Aging to gather information from the community in preparation for writing the area plan for services for fiscal year 1986-87.

Complaints to the county fall on deaf ears. While the city treats complaints seriously, it does not carry the weight of enforcement.

Subscribers are caught in a second maze as well.

Foothill, which purchased cable franchises stretching from Monrovia to Rialto 1½ years ago, cannot expand its Alta Loma service without getting a franchise from the city.

The city has already granted a franchise for the portion of town surrounding the service area to another firm, however.

Foothill System Manager Joni Odum indicated at the meeting that without the ability to expand, Foothill may not find it economically feasible to improve the Alta Loma service. "We do have a number of problems," she said. "The system needs to be completely rebuilt."

"I'm not prepared to give you a timetable," she admitted. "I'll be back in 60 days with a plan."

"H.O.T. TIPS" (HOUSE OF TOOLS)

To steambend short pieces of wood, wrap them in a damp towel, set the microwave oven on high for three minutes. This will make items such as chair spindles limber. For heavier pieces, resoak the towel from time to time.

If you need safety goggles that will keep the dust out, try motorcross goggles. They have impact lightweight resistant lenses, plastic frames, one-way ventilation and a detachable face mask.

When laying out 1/4 in. holes for shelf supports on cabinet sides cut a strip of 1/4 in. pegboard and use the holes as a drill guide.

To keep glue from sticking to forms or jigs, use a car wax such as Treewax Four Seasons. Car wax doesn't penetrate and discolor the work the way softer waxes do. Be sure to seal the form just with lacquer or shellac.

SAN BERNARDINO - An environmental impact report on a sand and gravel quarry proposed north of Rancho Cucamonga is still not complete in addressing the project's potential effects on the surrounding area, the county's Environmental Review Board (ERB) determined last

The ERB called for a second revision of the report after approximately 30 neighbors of the site attacked the report as inadequate.

"I think that when I review the EIR (report) in terms of the impacts on land use, on (traffic) circulation and on socioeconomic issues, there has not been enough discussion, enough information placed into this document, in terms of what those impacts will be and how they can be mitigated," testified Jeff King, Rancho Cucamonga's

Opponents of the 485-acre quarry told the board during a two-hour public hearing June 17 that the 135-page report does not adequately address effects on the area's traffic, noise levels, air quality and underground water

Of particular concern of area residents and city officials was the report's apparent determination that the quarry would not have a significant adverse effect on the area's socio-economics, which some residents felt included the value of neighboring properties and the construction on new houses in the area.

The board admitted socioeconomics had not been studied sufficiently to make a determination on that issue and asked the county planning staff to delete references to socioeconomic issues from the

An ERB vote on the report was delayed to 1 p.m. July 1 at the County Government Center in San Bernardino, followed possibly by a county Planning Commission vote on the project itself sometime before July 20.

Fourth Street Rock Crusher, a San Bernardino-based mining firm, proposes to mine 24.8 million cubic yards of sand and gravel from the site over 45 years. The proposed quarry site, north of Highland Avenue between Haven and Etiwanda avenues, would also contain cement and asphalt proportioning plants.

The ERB's responsibility is to determine that the report adequately addresses the environmental impacts of the project so it can be used by the Planning Commission to decide the project's merit.

Extensive revision was done to the document in recent months after a similar public hearing before the ERB in February yielded similar complaints from neighbors of the proposed quarry.

The Planning Commission must act on the proposal by July 20, which is the one-year submittal to the county for action and the deadline for such action to be taken.

The report basically states that the quarry project will have "significant unavoidable adverse impacts" on the surrounding area's air quality, biological resources, land use planning, traffic and visual resources.

However, residents of the nearby Victoria and Terra Vista planned communities said Tuesday that the report "glosses" over some issues such as socio-economics, while insufficiently addressing the real effects in other issues such as traffic and air quality.

Copies of the revised report will be made available to the public possibly as early as Monday but before the July 1 meeting, Hinshaw said.

Upland mom proud of her efforts to help asthmatics

By Suzanne Sproul

It's been a long, hard struggle for Peggy Thomas to convince others that asthma can be a debilitating disease if not treated

But the Upland mother of three said her efforts to get PAC, Parents of Asthmatic Children, have been worth it, and she's busier than ever with the nonprofit organization.

She's heading to New York next month for an appearance on "Good Morning America" and to participate in several conventions designed to establish more PAC chapters in that state.

PAC chapters are being created closer to home, too. Chapters are planned in Ventura County and Lakewood.

'We've had a lot of progress since we started in 1984. Now we would like to get into the school districts to educate teachers and school nurses about asthma so they can help the children," Thomas said.

Thomas' son, Christopher, and her two stepchildren both suffer every summer — and particularly on windy, smoggy days because they have asthma. Their plight spurred Thomas on in 1984 to start the organization she heads.

She said asthma is a very misunderstood disease, the effects of which can be eased by the right precautions and

POOL and SPA SUPPLIES

PAC has tried to work with pharmaceutical companies to reduce the cost of equipment and medication for asthmatics. To date, the efforts haven't been very successful, she said.

So PAC is beginning a mail-in pharmacy through which asthmatics can buy equipment and medicine at a discount. The service currently is being reviewed by PAC attorneys and should be available in three months.

'When all this started all I wanted was to meet people who had the same problems. Now PAC is booming and I think it will go nationwide.

'But our concern now is this summer. We're going to have a very hard summer and I hope asthmatics and their parents come to the next PAC meeting," Thomas said.

The meeting is scheduled June 25 at 7:30 p.m. at the Health Center, 7365 Carnelian Ave., Suite 136, Alta Loma, PAC meetings are free and open to the public. The topic will be 'Preparing for Summer.'

PAC membership is $35. initially, with a $15 per year fee thereafter. The cost includes membership in the American Lung Association, a peak flow meter (used to measure lung function) and a copy of the book, 'Children with Asthma.

When PAC began Thomas was the sole member. But now the group has a board of directors. Officers are Thomas, president; Dwight Russell, vice president; Dr. James Munson, medical adviser; Donna Thompson. president's assistant; and Jeanne Hennon, fund-raising chairman. All members of the board of directors either have an interest in asthma, have the disease themselves or have children with it.

Tax deductible contributions can be sent to Parents of Asthmatic Children Association, c/o Peggy Thomas, P.O. Box 5019, Upland, Calif., 91785.

The group is planning an Oct 8 black-tie optional fund-raiser banquet at the Red Lion Inn in

Alta Loma and Etiwanda Seniors Graduate

First the Ceremonies,

First the celebration, then the recovery.
That's the way it was for many Rancho
behind their school world in graduation cermonies at Chaffey College, then danced the night away at Disneyland Thursday

Gilda Morales, 17, Etiwanda High School's senior class president, was one of 60,000 Southern California graduates who celebrated at Disneyland.

"You usually don't go to Disneyland until sunrise," she said Friday morning, when interrupted a few hours after she finally got to bed.

Etiwanda High School festivities started Thursday morning with breakfast at Ontario's Red Lion Inn at 8 a.m.

The serious partying, "Grad Night," started at 11 p.m. and didn't stop until 5 a.m. the next day.

There was dancing at the teen-age nightclub, Videopolis, plus rides, eating and shopping, Morales said.

"Mainly, what everyone does is go see the groups. They had Mister Mister, Climax, Star Point. It's an experience," she said.

Morales said Thursday night was one the few fun times she'll have before she starts school at Cal Poly, Pomona, in three weeks, for a five-week program.

"I've never gotten a chance to play during the summer," she said. "This is my last chance to play before I get on with bigger and better things."

She'll go back to Cal Poly in the fall and then transfer to the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA).

Morales was one of three student speakers at the graduation ceremony Wednesday. She gave a speech called, "Proud to be an Eagle." (The school's mascot is an eagle.)

Valedictorian Leslie Trujillo talked about success and its inspiration.

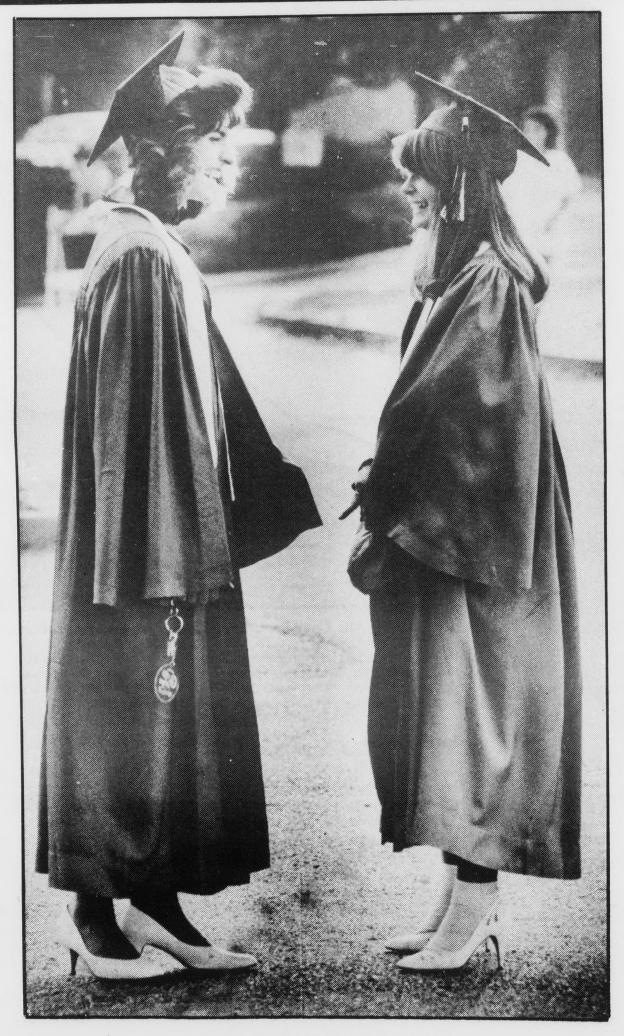

Kirk Kushin, Etiwanda High School's Associated Student Body President told his classmates to "strive for the best" in his commencement address Wednesday.

Alta Loma High School graduates also went to Disneyland Thursday night, but no students from the school were available to talk about it.

Paul, a Rialto schoolteacher who moved to Upland in February, has decided to share the spotlight with Eric - who has acted as family spokesman over the past year - to encourage people to write President Reagan and sign petitions in support of a move toward the freedom of the hostages

While neither wished to comment specifically on the Reagan administration's efforts to free the hostages, both said communications between the government and the families have advanced, but could still improve

They blame original lack of communication about the kidnappers' motives for their father's capture. While the U.S. government knew why the hostages were being taken in July 1984, the public did not know until about a year later, they said.

'Our father was a victim of this," Paul said. "When he was over there he had no idea why the Americans were taken. He thought they were in the wrong place at the wrong time. He didn't know until he was taken that it was a systematic action.'

The hostage-takers, believed to be the extremist group Islamic Jihad, have since publicly demanded through ex-hostage Benjamin Weir the release of 17

Kuwait prisoners in exchange for the remaining captives.

The brothers attribute the opening up of communication about the hostages to the public outpouring of letters and petitions to the White House. While the five hostages and Weir were in the spotlight again last summer during the hijacking of a TWA jet in Beirut, they have since receded into the background.

'Until the hostages are released we won't be satisfied with anyone's efforts," Eric said. "The fact that this has gone on for more than a year for every hostage shows that not enough is being done."

The pair hopes that the release of the MCA-Curb record will keep the hostage situation at the forefront of the public's It's designed "to take coverage away from being static to being constant and continuous," Paul said. "It's been the lack of continuous coverage which has prolonged the situation.

Paul also urged those interested to write their government representatives, including President Reagan, with a non-political, humanitarian message for his father and the

"Say, 'We're praying for these men. We want them home,' Paul said.

Delay was the name of the game last Wednesday night in Rancho Cucamonga.

While the City Council breezed through most of its 42item agenda with little debate, it bogged down in a debate over sign design details at the Virginia Dare Winery Business and illumination methods - a debate council members said they did not want to enter they put off a decision.

After more than an hour of

(Council member Dick Dahl abstained from the discussion because of business ties to the Edwards Cinemas, one of the planned tenants in the building.)

Admitting little expertise in the area, the council delayed for a month consideration of the developer's appeal of a Planning signs be the same style. Councilwoman Pam Wright offered an explanation. "We just approved spending $80,000" to advertise the city to potential businesses, she said, 'and now we're telling them they can't put up signs.'

"I don't want to slam the door" by denying the appeal, Chuck Buquet agreed.

"There is a lot of tasteful signing available," he added, Boulevard-type signs you see in some other cities.'

In delaying the appeal, council members expressed hope the developer and city planners could forge a compromise.

David Michael, managing partner for Christeson, was confident a compromise could be reached.

"We'll do it. The four of us can work it out," he said afterward as city planners and his architect gathered around.

Sheridan all-CIF selection

Upland High School's Bob Sheridan was named to the 1986 all-CIF 3A Division baseball team for his effort during the past season.

Sheridan, a junior infielder who batted .449 on the year, was a third team all-CIF selection as was Damien's Kenny Korn. Don Lugo's Anthony Clements, a firstround draft choice by the Kansas City Royals, was a CIF 3A first team member.

Named the team's Most Valuable Player, Sheridan was an all-around standout for the Highlanders, going 6-1 on the mound while batting .545 in Baseline League play.

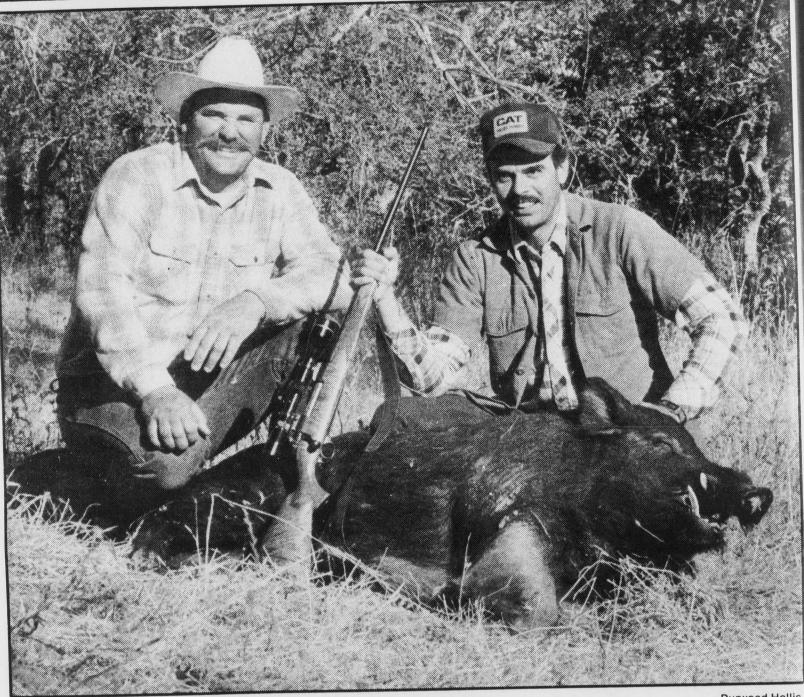

"He's got to be there," said Upland coach Mike Alonso of Sheridan. "When he wasn't at third, he was pitching for us, and he was always there offensively. He really came into his own this year. He wasn't big with the RBI, but a real good contact hitter. That and his pitching was a big key for us this year."

Sheridan and teammates Shawn Aeschliman (Jr., designated hitter), Buddy Mitchell (Sr., catcher) and Adam Koontz (Sr., first base) were first team all-league selections. Greg Fiorindo (Jr., infield) and Tim Albert (Jr., outfield) garnered second team honors, while Jason Fagundes (Soph., outfield) and Buddy McGown (Soph., infield/pitcher) collected honorable mention selections.

Alta Loma landed five players on the all-league second team selections, including Clint Schuster (Sr., pitcher), who finished league play with a 3-4 mark and 4.17 ERA; Richie Schick (Sr., catcher), who batted .419 in BL competition; Frank Torrez (Jr., infielder), .408; David Masucci (Jr., infielder), .500; Isaac Galloway (Jr., outfielder), .468.

Braves collecting honorable mention notice were Mike Collins (Jr., infielder), Kurt Koerth (Jr., pitcher) and Brent Walraven.

ALHS finished sixth in the Baseline League at 5-8-1 (6-12-1 overall).

TROPHY BOAR — Frank Barratti of Upland (right) kneels behind 265-pound boar he recently shot at Camp 5 near Paso Robles. The boar had three-inch teeth which qualified as a trophy. With Barratti is Craig Rossier, ranch manager. Durwood Hollis of Rancho Cucamonga also was in the trio, which flushed out many boars in the 250-pound range.

Upland preps for Legion tourney

By TED SILLANPAA

Eleven years have passed since Upland's American Legion team won its own holiday baseball tournament and, apparently, manager Ray Baker couldn't care less.

As his team prepares to host the 26th annual Upland American Legion Tournament, which starts July 4, Baker explains why he doesn't fret over an 11-year championship drought.

"We don't worry about our record until we get to the end of the season," Baker said. "That's when we need to find out how many wins we'll need to make the playoffs."

Two Independence Day games will open the tourney at Memorial Park.

North Sacramento will take on perennially powerful West Covina at 5:30 p.m.

Upland's quest for its first title since 1975 will begin at 8 p.m. when it hosts Hacienda Heights. Action in the 16-team affair heats up July 5.

At 10 a.m., Moreno Valley plays Sunnyvale, an enti northern California, in Memorial Park. Redlands Post 650 meets Montclair at Montclair High School. LaHabra and Ontario battle at Ontario High School.

First-round play concludes at 12:30 p.m. when Fontana meets the Fullerton Angels at Memorial Park. Pomona and Rancho Cucamonga collide at Montclair while San Bernardino and Azusa play in Ontario.

The consolation-format tourney continues in the afternoon and evening with second-round winners' bracket games at all three ball parks at 5 p.m., 5:30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Play continues with action at Memorial Park July 6. The championship game is scheduled for 8 p.m.

"We don't really have any tournament favorites," said director Sue Baker. "We think it will be very competitive with the two new teams in from northern California."

All 16 teams seek the title won by Chino in 1984 and 1985.

The Fullerton Angels will be trying to reclaim the crown that they won in 1983. Pomona hopes to recapture the honor it earned in 1981

Prior to the '75 title, Upland had not won since the inaugural affair in 1961. In between, of course, Rollie Fingers pitched and hit Upland to the 1964 American Legion World Series championships.

Family can provide a model for self-dresser

By Willard Abraham Copley News Service

Q. Our 8-year-old son insists on dressing himself, and that's fine except for one thing. He sometimes doesn't finish the job. Because buttons and zippers may be ignored, he might get out of the house slightly unfinished.

We want to help him be independent and accept responsibilities, but we also want him to look nice on the street and in school.

McPeters new Superior Court commissioner

Presiding Judge Kenneth G. Ziebarth has announced the selection of Roberta McPeters as Superior Court commissioner.

She replaces Kraig L. Zappia, who resigned her position for health reasons after serving as a Superior Court Commissioner since 1979.

McPeters has been in private practice since 1978 in the San Bernardino area, specializing in family and criminal law.

She was admitted to the California Bar in 1978 after completing her juris doctorate degree at La Verne College of Law. She also has a bachelor of arts degree from the University of California, Riverside.

McPeters will take the bench July 7, initially sitting in Juvenile Court, San Bernardino.

McPeters has served as president of the West San Bernardino League of Women Voters and has been active in the San Bernardino Boys Club, Goodwill Industries and YWCA.

She has also held a variety of committee positions in the San Bernardino County Bar Association and has been actively involved in legal aid. McPeters resides in Rialto.

I know this is a small point, but it bothers me, so a small reply would be welcome.

A. The model provided by others in the family may be a subtle reminder to him, especially if an occasional quiet comment is made regarding your own buttoning and zipping. Also, he may need a little more time in getting ready to get out of the house.

Does he have any actual manipulative difficulty with the task? If so, an occasional helping hand might be appropriate.

Q. I recently read your column for the first time, and was so glad to see your approach to parents. I have a burning desire to improve the lives of all children, especially those under the age of 5, in whatever way ! can, and strongly support others who do the same.

Right now our 21-month-old is my priority.

Here are some titles I consider excellent and mandatory for parents: "Your Baby and Child" by Penelope Leach; "Your Child's Self-Esteem" by Dorothy C. Briggs; "Children: The Challenge" by Rudolf Dreikurs; "The First Three Years of Life" by Burton White; "The Strong-Willed Child" by James Dobson.

"Growing Up Gifted" by Barbara Clark is one of the best I've seen for parents of gifted kids. However, it is my belief that all "normal" children deserve the stimulating "gifted approaches" recommended and would probably ultimately be considered gifted if raised in the early years under that presumption.

I resist the temptation to list in this letter all the reasons why I believe the first days, weeks and months are so crucial to the total life of the individual. I encourage you to focus parents' attention on this issue and provide information to stimulate better parenting.

A. It is so pleasant receiving mail from thoughtful people like you. Thank you very much.

In his book "Future Shock" Alvin Toffler wrote that "parenthood remains the greatest single preserve of the amateur." Unfortunately that is still true of many parents, but maybe your efforts and mine are paying off.

I agree with your suggestion that all children can benefit from approaches used with gifted children, but there may be limits on the ability of some to benefit. They all might not reach the gifted level of performance. See CHILDREN/Page 34

Health and fitness really pays

Evolution, enterprise quickly render innovations obsolete

By Jack Williams Copley News Service

Take some ingenuity. Add a dose of high-tech science. And find a consumer who needs to be told what he needs. What have

Well, waterproof sun-block spray, for starters. And how about sunglasses with variable sun-protection factors and tanning lenses ... sunscreens that come in Day-Glo chic ... home dental plaque removers ... sports shoes with multiple lacing systems that custom-cradle the foot. .

Welcome to the health and fitness marketplace, summer 1986, where evolution and enterprise render obsolete yesterday's

With long, sunny days on the summer horizon, the focus is on the face and other frequently exposed body parts. But progress also can go to the beach with corrosiveresistant wheelchairs and it can equip the long-distance runner with an aid station.

Following are some of the products for the person who thought he had everything:

LE ZINK

Remember when body painting was in voque? This sunscreen may create a whole new generation of painted warriors. Psychedelia meets the sun.

A high-protection sunscreen with a zincoxide base, the product was introduced in Australia, where it sold a reported 500,000 units. Now, it comes to the United States in - are you ready for this? - electric green, shocking pink, azure blue, acid yellow, zesty orange and summer mauve.

Color-coordinate it with your swimwear, suggests Nikkal Industries Ltd. of New York, which is introducing it to the domestic market. The screen is designed to stay on during swimming and retails for a suggested $4.99 per pot, which contains one-third

WATERPROOF BLOCK-OUT SPRAY Patented by Sea & Ski, it is packaged in a 4-ounce aerosol can and is designed to provide maximum sunburn protection, lasting at least 80 minutes in the water. Block Out Waterproof Spray SPF 15 will eliminate 93 percent of the sun's ultraviolet rays, say its promoters. Its primary or target market: 25- to 49-year-olds and young children who are sun-sensitive and require maximum protection. The Block Out is being introduced along with waterproof clear lotion with a sunprotection factor (SPF) of 8 (which screens out 88 percent of the sun's ultraviolet rays) and a waterproof tanning lotion with an SPF

HIGH-TECH SUNGLASSES

Carrera is introducing the tanning lens, designed to stamp out "raccoon eyes." Who, after all, needs white circles around their eyes when the rest of their face is as golden brown as a freshly baked peanut butter cookie?

The Carrera line offers lenses with a number indicating the degree of protection: C-60, C-80 or C-100. All models are said to provide 100 percent protection from ultraviolet B rays.

The new lenses also are designed to block out 75 percent of visible light, which is the light from the sun which the eye can see. Overexposure can cause eye strain, tiredness and headaches.

The UV-A, or tanning, lenses come in gray or violet. Suggested retail price: approximately $50.

HOME PLAQUE REMOVER

A rotation/counter-rotation bristle motion makes this hand-held device a tenacious weapon against plaque, the bacteria-breeding film that can cause gum

Dental Research Corp. of Tucker, Ga. which markets the instrument under the name Interplak - claims it is "provisionally approved" by the American Dental Association. A research project at Loyola University, Chicago, indicated that Interplak removes more than 98 percent of plaque twice as much as ordinary toothbrushing.

The rechargeable, battery-operated instrument also will remove about $99 from your pocketbook.

Clinical studies show that it is particularly effective for people who wear

"Brushing with a toothbrush is complicated for people in fixed orthodontic appliances, and that greatly increases the difficulty of plaque removal," said John R. van Venrooy, assistant professor in the Department of Periodontics at the University of North Carolina. "Using the Interplak significantly lowered plaque levels within a week," he added.

Additional clinical studies are being conducted at University of the Pacific and the University of Missouri, Kansas City.

Interplak can be ordered by dentists or by calling Dental Research Corp.'s toll-free number (1-800-334-4031).

MULTIPLE-LACE SHOES

There's more than meets the eyelet here. In the interests of custom fit, not one, but two lacing systems on each shoe are provided by Kaepa Inc. of San Antonio, Texas. One is designed for better forefoot control, the other to secure heel and ankle

Such a shoe may take longer to tie. But Tom Adams, Kaepa's founder and a former priest, insists that is a small price to pay for an athletic shoe that can provide greater comfort and optimal protection and safety.

Promoters of this footwear label it as the most revolutionary development in tennis shoes since the discovery of vulcanized rubber in 1839.

But it's not all that new. Adams discovered it by accident 24 years ago.

Movie theater's opening in R.C. will be delayed

By Marianne Aiken

The show won't go on at a planned six-screen movie theater in Rancho Cucamonga, at least until Aug. 1.

The Edwards Cinema next to the Virginia Dare Winery Business Centre is the victim of construction delays, said David Micheal, managing partner of the Irvine-based Christeson Co., which is renovating the historic winery into a retail and office

The business center, located at Foothill Boulevard and Haven Avenue, is being built around a tower and grape-crushing building that were part of the original 1910 winery.

The company is also appealing two decisions by the Rancho Cucamonga Planning Commission related to the exterior wall treatment at the theater, and signs in other parts of the project. But the appeals have nothing to do with late opening date on the theater, Micheal said.

The theater was originally scheduled to open in May.

He said the company has on hand approved plans for a plastic coated and painted white block wall on the outside of the theater, and said the city is requesting a textured, stucco finish.

"Eight months from now, when the vegetation grows (on the theater walls), nobody's going to know what's under there anyway," Micheal said.

City Planner Brad Buller said there is a requirement that the theater and the remaining buildings in the project be compatible with the overall architectural design of the towered office building, which has a terra cotta colored stucco exterior treatment.

Micheal said that in requirements for signs on the restaurants and professional building, "We're being asked to do things that other projects haven't been asked to do.

Buller said the city wants the style that's being used now on the winery's monument sign to be used on the signs for the professional building and restaurants

"It would be that type of sign rather than the (individually lit, channeled) type of letters you see on shopping centers," Buller said.

The City Council heard the appeal on the signs recently. The appeal on the exterior materials is scheduled for the July 16 council meeting, said Deputy City Clerk Debbie Adams.

Other aspects of the project are moving along smoothly, Micheal said. Ground will be broken for the international food court in about 30 days, he said, and a Spires restaurant on the site is under construction.

About 60 percent of the space in the corner office building is leased, he said.

Social Security, Medicare questions lead seniors' list

By Leonard J. Hansen Copley News Service

Social Security and Medicare take the lead in questions received this week. With the changes in the coverages, the scope of the questions should prove of value to most readers.

Q: I am 64, work full time at a company where there is a group health plan, and intend to continue working.

When I turn 65, must I also start funding Medicare premiums as well as my share in the company health plan? -L.J., San Jose, Calif.

A: No, you do not have to fund both, and the change in Medicare came about only a year ago. People who continue working beyond age 65 and have a company group health plan now need not also pay premiums for the Medicare supplemental - Part B - coverage.

At age 65 everyone should be enrolled in Medicare by personal application at the Social Security office. If still working and covered by a company health plan, you may request an exemption from the Part B coverage. Bring a letter or memo from the company that documents the coverage. By all means, do enroll for the Part A

When you stop working and are no longer covered by the company health plan, take such notice within seven months to the Social Security office to instate the Part B coverage without penalty. For non-working people age 65 and over who fail to file for Medicare Part B coverage on a timely basis, there can be added premium costs of 10 percent for each year late in

Q: Last year I had angioplasty and there was a standby medical crew in case I needed bypass surgery. They charged $500 plus $85 for consultation.

Why doesn't Medicare cover this? - R.C., Huntington, Ind.

A: Medicare normally does not pay for procedures not performed - but if there was a valid medical reason for the standby medical crew, ask your doctor to put such information in writing. Take the letter to your Social Security office and ask for a "review of the decision." You might get a reversal in your favor at this level.

If not, and if the claim is for more than $100, you may come right back and submit a "request for hearing." The decision from the hearing will be final.

There are two appeal levels open to all Medicare claimants. Mistakes can be made in the system, or the medical information provided by the doctors might be lacking either of which can lead to a original claim denial

If you have a question or want further consideration, march right in (have your Medicare paperwork and any added information you can develop in hand) and ask for a review of the decision. You'll find the staff, in most cases, quite responsive.

Q: I am legally blind and am unable to see my toenails for cutting, and therefore need to go to a podiatrist for the cutting and for a fungus. It costs me $20 each time, and so far, Medicare will not pay for any of it.

Is there a way I can make them See SENIORS/Page 33

Summer pruning is a term that can apply in different ways to many of the plants we grow in our home gardens, but overall it might be described as any pruning or pinching done during the summer to help promote strong and compact growth, flower and fruit production and general health of our plants.

In this sense, any pinching back of wayward shoots on a houseplant, vine or shrub during June, July and August constitutes summer pruning for shapeliness. Cutting a hybrid tea rose with a long stem immediately above an outward facing leaf stem is a summer pruning technique that prods the plant into producing more flowering wood and at the same time adds to the attractive. open shape of the bush.

Removing spent flowers on annual bedding plants, begonias and fuchsias will help persuade these plants to remain in their youthful flowerproduction phase. Otherwise, they will follow the pull of nature and begin displaying the more tired look of a seed producer.

Perennials and shrub flowers, removed as soon as the blooms have faded, are also prevented from draining the plants of energy in the seed production process. At the same time, any dead or broken stems, branches or shoots that are observed should be removed as they are noticed for the sake of the plant's health.

Suckers that commonly emerge from the base of plum trees and roses also should be removed as soon as they are noticed. The larger they are allowed to grow, the more difficult they are to detach.

To remove these suckers along with the dormant growth buds at their base, gently brush away the soil until you can grasp the sucker shoot firmly. Pull downward to remove it.

Another type of sucker growth I remove as it appears during the summer is the watersprout, common on trees that have been pruned too enthusiastically in early spring. Watersprouts are easily recognized - they're long, thin, whippy shoots that head straight up. As with suckers, it's a good idea to remove them young, keeping in mind that memorable pruning principle:

the smallest cuts are the kindest cuts of all.

The term "summer pruning" however, turns the minds of many backyard gardeners automatically to their fruit trees.

Traditionally, we prune our fruit trees in early spring, just before or as their growth buds begin to swell - and that's that. We clean out dead and diseased growth as well as crossing and crowded branches, head back the main branches by about one-third of their newest growth and shorten side shoots.

However, this dormant season pruning greatly stimulates the growth of new wood - often more than we want, and sometimes even at the expense of good fruiting if we go at it with too heavy a hand. Summer pruning, especially early summer pruning, has quite the opposite effect on fruit trees. It represses vigorous vegetative growth and at the same time helps throw the plant's energies into the production of short fruiting branchlets, or spurs.

Summer pruning has traditionally been practiced mainly in Europe and mostly on pears and apples, which produce their fruits on fairly long-lived spurs. It was perfected as fine art in the training of these trees on wires or against walls as singlestemmed cordons or hedgerows, or as fan-shaped or horizontal-armed espaliers.

On these specially trained plants, side shots growing off the main branches are systematically shortened throughout the summer. As soon as a shoot grows beyond 12 inches in length, it is shortened to stubs of just two growth buds. The main branches are headed back, as in regular pruning, as new growth resumes in spring.

'Natural teeth' can now be implanted

By Leigh Fenly Copley News Service

For 25 million Americans, socalled permanent teeth have proved to be not so permanent after all. Half the population between ages 45 and 74 have lost two sets of teeth to the tooth fairy and must now endure the hassles of dentures. For them, a third set of natural teeth would be a gift from heaven.

Now dentists have succeeded where nature failed. The newest and closest approximation of natural teeth is now available dentures implanted permanently into the jawbone.

Implant patients undergo a two-step surgical process, designed two decades ago by a Swedish physician and introduced to the United States

The procedure is called osseointegration - osseo from the Latin for bone; and integration, which describes the bonding process that occurs between implant and jawbone. Success rates now top 90

To the denture wearer, the benefits of permanent teeth are immediately apparent. Permanent teeth can't slip or bounce around in the mouth or fall out over the supper table. Furthermore, teeth implanted like normal teeth chew like normal teeth. Because they press on the gum instead of the jawbone, dentures reduce normal chewing ability as much as 75 percept, dentists estimate.

In the long term, implants may actually improve the course of preventive dentistry. The pressure dentures exert on the gums causes a degenerative loss of jawbone that begins once natural teeth are removed. For some individuals, bone loss becomes so severe that eventually they can't even wear dentures. These patients must undergo expensive and elaborate bone grafting techniques or go toothless. And dentists explain that as the population ages. more and more denture wearers will be faced with these kinds of Implants answer this worry by preventing the accelerated rate See IMPLANTS/Page 35 Do You Miss Hearing the Birds Sing? You don't have to! Modern hearing in-

Needs of science, engineering fields are not being met

By Robert Locke Copley News Service

Science teaching in public schools gets the attention, and university scientists and graduate students get the research money. But the crucial undergraduate college education has been all but forgotten and now the bill is coming due, according to a federal report.

"We think there is a crisis. We're trying to sound the alarm across the country. We have a very serious problem facing this country," said Thomas B. Day, president of San Diego State University

Day is part of a National Science Board committee that studied science, math and engineering education for undergraduates, a committee which recently reported "serious deficiencies" that require Immediate attention, primarily Barnard Valeska hopes to wave to his alma mater from 80 miles high shortly after the 500th anniversary of Columbus' first voyage to America.

Mark Johnson, who already has traveled to the north pole, China and the Outback in Australia, said space travel will be "the ultimate adventure."

Valeska, 31, a Santa Barbara dentist, and Johnson, 39, an Anaheim Hills businessman and real estate developer, are two of about 250 people who have signed up for space flights a Seattle-based travel company plans to launch beginning in 1992

Project Space Voyage promises to be the "first opportunity ever offered to the general public" to orbit the Earth, according to a brochure from Society Expeditions Inc., which specializes in travel to exotic locations.

For $50,000, passengers will take off from a yet-to-bedetermined launch site on a yetto-be-built spaceship, orbit the Earth for eight to 12 hours while dining on two meals and return to the launching pad the same

Valeska, who is single, figures the price tag is a bargain.

"When I was a little kid my dad would wake us up at 4 in the morning to watch Alan Shepard, but it didn't really sink in then," he said. "I always thought I'd be about 60 years old before something like this would be available and that it would cost a million bucks.

"I have six years to save the money. I don't see why more people aren't signing up."

Valeska said he's content to be booked on the second Project Space Voyage trip, scheduled two weeks after the inaugural launch on Oct. 12, 1992.

Johnson said the anticipation over his flight, although more than six years distant, already has made him "a certifiable basket case.

"I've done adventure travel around the world with my two sons," he said. "I've been across Siberia and to the north pole. I've been to China three times, to the Outback in Australia and to all of

"There aren't too many frontiers left on Earth.'

This fall, Johnson plans to climb Mount Kilimanjaro in East Africa with his youngest son, 15.

"I have a procedure with my boys." he said. "Every year I take one of them off alone and we go

He's going to space by himself, however. "At that price, if my kids want to go, they can pay for it themselves," he said. That price includes lodging during a three-day preflight orientation at the launch site, all meals and specially designed flight suits.

The flight will be aboard a spaceship still in the design stages at a small Redwood Citybased research and development company, Pacific American Launch Systems Inc.

Each traveler is guaranteed a window seat in the 20-passenger ship, which offers "generous space and the comfort of a jet aircraft," according to the brochure.

"As in all Society Expeditions programs, the traveler becomes an active participant in the daily adventure," the brochure says. "Living not on the sidelines but as an interested explorer."

Because of the newness of commercial space travel, the U.S. Department of Transportation has just begun drawing up regulations.

The department's Office of Commercial Space Transportation, created by executive order in 1984, reviews applications first for national security and foreign policy considerations and second for safety, said Madeline Johnson, the office director.

"We look at the payload, the trajectory of the flight, the launch site and the destination," she said. "Then we conduct a safety review: who is conducting the launch, their credentials and the performance characteristics of the space vehicle."

Society Expeditions, which started 12 years ago as a society for the preservation of archaeological monuments, has taken tourists to Antarctica, the Galapagos Islands and the Amazon River.

"We have continued to include the educational aspect on all of our travels," said Collette Bevis. director of Project Space

According to the project's brochure, "professional experts" will point out prominent landmarks and explain atmospheric conditions from space. The project's goal is to take "thousands of people into space," Bevis said.

Of the 250 or so who have paid a $5,000 deposit on their reservations, she said, some are planning their trip to commemorate a "special celebration."

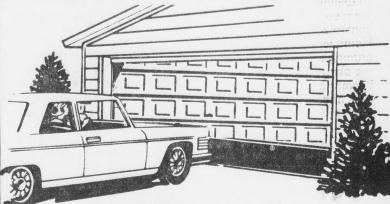

"Some want to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries," Bevis said. "A lot of people just said they've always wanted to go to space.

Reservation deposits will be kept in an escrow account at the Old National Bank in Seattle, Bevis said.

familiar with Project Space Voyage, but advised prospective passengers to ask for a complete statement of terms of the escrow account.

"Consumers should find out the exact terms and conditions and receive a copy of the exact escrow agreement," Ames said.

Check your doctor and have him document your condition and submit a copy of this letter with your claim. If they will then allow the coverage, bundle up your past, similar bills for representation as a claim.

You also may take your question to Social Security, requesting a review of the decision.

Q: I worked for a major company in New Jersey for 32 years and was terminated when my job was eliminated. I received a 40 percent disability on the job but never received a disability pension. What can be done? I am now 76 years of age.

A: It sounds that, at the time you were terminated and without a disability pension, you had a fine case for the state labor department, for they do have a strong role in such cases if they can be verified.

I'd suggest you file a letter now to the commissioner of the New Jersey state labor department, presenting the facts of your case in a clear, understandable, chronological order. Ask the state to get involved now.

The alternative is to prepare the same type of information and retain legal counsel in New Jersey to take your complaint to the company and/or your termination. If the facts are as you have written us, you just might have a valid and valuable claim.

90 DAY SAME AS CASH

By Jimmy Thornton Copley News Service

Back in the 1950s, at the beginning of the nuclear arms race between the United States and Soviet Union, Maj. John "Doc" Hardison was "very careful" when he climbed out of

He was a member of the 4925th Test Group (Atomic), a collection of the nation's finest pilots, mechanics and crewmen.

They dropped atomic bombs for a living. Their tests paved the way for America's nuclear arsenal today.

As if dropping the atomic and hydrogen bombs over a six-year period wasn't dramatic enough, as part of the tests they also flew through the ominous mushroom clouds to collect radioactive fallout in special filters attached to the wing tips of the bombers.

As a result, the skins of the bombers were too hot to handle.

Today, Hardison's eyes grow big when he shakes his head and says, "If I'd known then what I know now, I would not have flown through even one nuclear cloud. And if they'd known, they wouldn't have sent us through one. They would have sent monkeys instead.

"A vast number of my buddies are now dead, or terminally ill from cancer.'

They all had participated in Recently, Hardison's hands became planes as he relived test experiences in the living room of his small poolside apartment in San Diego.

"Yes, I'm lucky," he acknowledged. So far, at age 67, he shows no signs of cancer in his medical checkups. And he knocks on wood Lucky or not, he's happy to be alive and kicking.

He said that regardless of what you hear today, he and his colleagues had little knowledge in the '50s of the extent of radioactivity's dangers. If anyone did know, they weren't talking.

Hardison and the other fliers were warv enough to avoid contact with the outside of the bombers after passing through the radioactive clouds. They wouldn't touch the planes until after the aircraft had been

They knew from the bombings in Japan that there was a danger, but not of the long-term effects.

The only protection the fliers had were leather gloves and ordinary flight suits. In the air, as they approached "the cloud" (mushroom was a civilian adjective the military eschewed), they did breathe only pure oxygen as one precaution. But that was it, Hardison recalled, again shaking his head. Now he knows that some of the rays of nuclear fallout will

"I personally am not going to come up with a magic solution," Day said. "I don't know the answer and at the moment, I'm not sure there is an answer."

But, he added, "it always comes back to spending money.'

The report recommends the National Science Foundation, beginning in 1988-89, invest $100 million per year in programs for undergraduate education in science, math and engineering, with about half of it aimed at

Other expenditures would include helping professors update their professional skills, improve courses and curriculum, support research by undergraduates and encourage minorities, women and the handicapped to pursue science and engineering careers.

"But the Science Foundation and the federal government are not (and cannot be) the main source of support," Day said. "It's the states and the public bodies that have to face these issues.

Day also said private industry must put more money into undergraduate education because "it is in the private sector's interest to improve science, math and engineering education.'

The report noted industry gave $1.6 billion to higher education in 1984, but they "have concentrated their support on graduate education and research linked closely to their interests."

Day also worried that industry is luring top scientists and engineers out of academia, where their knowledge can be passed on to new generations.

"Universities are peopleintensive," and that's where most of the money goes, he said. "But science and engineering education are also thingintensive. That imposes some excruciating choices," as schools must decide whether to put their limited funds into professors or equipment.

"To some extent, we're victims of our own success," Day said.

That issue reminds me of a well-known case in educational literature. A competent teacher of the trainable mentally retarded (approximately 25 to 50 (Q) "proved" that with her methods they could be brought up to the "normal." Her claims were made in a doctoral dissertation.

Unfortunately for her, the dissertation (and its falsely documented claims) came to the attention of an excellent researcher who challenged her conclusions. It would have been so good if (1) she had limited her efforts to her teaching without stretching so far in her conclusions and especially (2) if the trainable-to-normal performance could really have been proven.

However, the idea of adapting the best teaching methods and materials to meet the needs of all children is certainly valid.

. . . Q. It is so frustrating to have a child who has Tourette syndrome and hear all the misconceptions people have about it. I'd be so grateful to you if you would share some of the facts in your column.

A. According to materials distributed by the Tourette Syndrome Association, it is a ineurological disorder that results in involuntary muscular movements, uncontrollable vocal sounds and inappropriate words. The tics generally start between the ages of 2 and 16, with males afflicted three to one over females

Facial tics and other bodily movements, strange sounds and involuntarily shouted obscenities may be among the symptoms. Tension or stress can increase their occurrence.

Physicians have had some success in treating Tourette syndrome, and in a few cases complete remission occurs after adolescence. Intelligence of Tourette individuals is within the normal range.

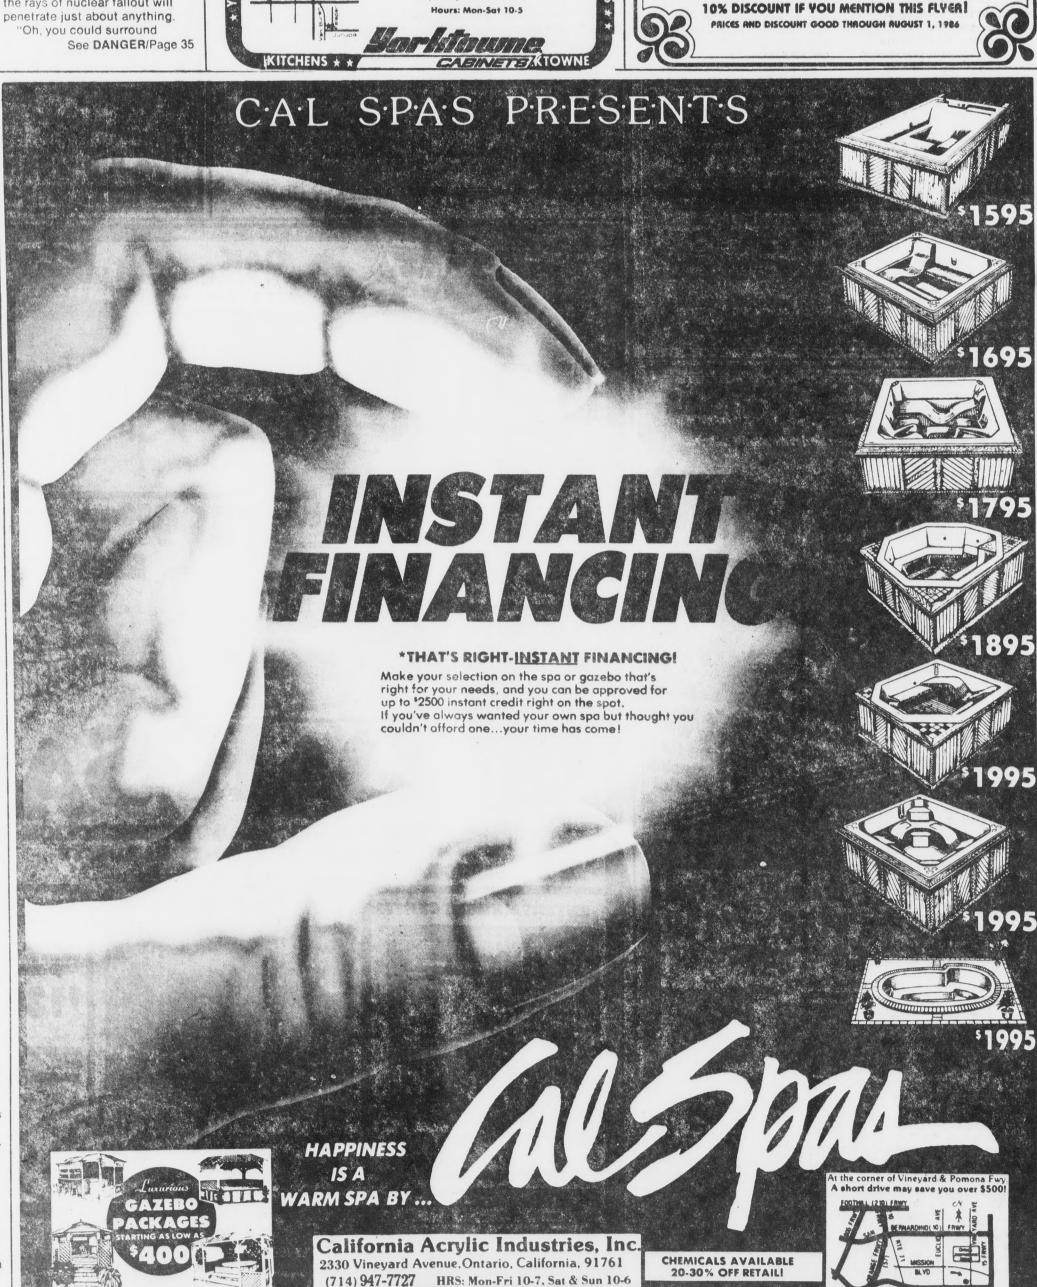

It is estimated that 100,000 people in the United States have it, but as many as one in 200 with milder tic conditions So it is far from being a rarity.

Like many medical advances, today's implants are an improvement over an old idea. Since the 1930s, dentists have tried implants, but failure was almost universal often due to infection. The latest success is credited to Swedish physician Per-Ingvar Branemark, who pioneered the new two-step procedure and use of titanium implants that are secured into the jawbone as a foundation for artificial teeth.

The process requires two visits to an oral surgeon, a threeto six-month healing process, followed by a trip to the dentist to have the false teeth affixed to the titanium implant.

The first step involves a surgical procedure in which a long incision exposes the iawbone and up to six titanium fixtures are implanted directly

When the implants are in place, the skin covering the jawbone is sewn back together. Most patients can return to work the next day with no more discomfort than from a simple tooth extraction.

Four to six months of healing follows, which is the key element to Branemark's system. In his original studies, the Swedish physician found that if the implants are allowed to heal without pressure on them, bone cells will bond tightly to the titanium, creating a strong foundation for the artificial teeth.

Patients don't have to go toothless; they may wear either temporary or permanent dentures that have been altered to keep pressure off the implants.

Researchers now are

One piece of lace went through the lower eyelets and the other piece through the upper eyelets, forming two separate bows. This evolved into a two-piece shoe, and eight years later he received a utility patent on the idea.

Kaepa's top-of-the-line K-169 retails for around $49.95. Running shoes also are available, the Kaepa 225 for men and 235 for women.

BEACH WHEELCHAIR Operating on the theory that beaches are only marginally wheelchair-accessible, Jim Rice of Naples, Fla., decided to create a device that would withstand the bite of salty air, the spray of ocean water and the slush of soggy sand. The result: the Beachmaster, a wheelchair equipped with rustproof stainless steel to prevent corrosion.

Rice, a 35-year-old potter, says his wheelchair is equipped with specially designed bushings for corrosion-free performance in any aquatic environment. It is devoid of chrome-plated tubing components that might rust or corrode.

Nor are ball bearings or rubber tires part of the design. Instead, the Beachmaster features 4-inch bands of stainless steel.

Weighing 54 pounds, Rice's Dignicare 900 model folds up for easy transportation and carries a five-year limited warranty provided by Dignicare, its manufacturer. Suggested retail price: $995.

QUENCHER

Like the sun-protection products listed above, this is a timely addition to the marketplace for the active outdoors person. Warmer weather increases the need for fluids - before, during and after activity. Especially if you're running 10 miles on a humid day.

Quencher is not a fluid; it's a fluid container - lightweight, compact and designed to fit securely over the waistband of your shorts, or tights. A thermo clip with a Velcro-covered side is its unique feature. A self-sealing cap permits easy access to the contents - just a push of the humb.

experimenting with ways to decrease the healing period, including applying electrical current to the implants or coating the implants with synthetic bone.

Once the implants have bonded to bone, patients return to the oral surgeon to have a tiny circle of tissue removed from the top of each implant. The exposed implant is then ready to be connected, via titanium screws, to the denture.

Once in place, implanted artificial teeth need conscientious care, including brushing, flossing and regular checkups.

Recent research at the Mayo Clinic using Branemark's method achieved a 98 percent success rate with the implants over a two-year period. Complications were minimal and easily resolved, a Mayo researcher reported.

But he cautioned that osseointegration is not adaptable for all who wear or need dentures.

Patients who have been toothless for many years may not have enough bone left for implantation. Additionally, individuals with certain diseases like osteoporosis (bone loss) and diabetes may not be appropriate candidates.

Since the Branemark system was introduced to the United States, other implant systems have been developed in the country. These have economized the process and made implants more cost effective. Branemark, the so-called Rolls-Royce of implants, may cost as much as $2,000 per implant, compared to newer U.S. systems that bring the cost closer to $500.

Most oral surgeons now equip themselves with several implant systems, which differ primarily in the materials used. Surgeons will select a system for each patient, based on such factors as the amount of bone available, whether natural teeth remain and patient preference.

For example, patients who don't want to endure the healing period, might benefit from a onestep sapphire implant that can be completed in weeks rather than months. Individuals with some natural teeth might benefit from one of the newer, less expensive implants.

Most insurance companies do not routinely cover implants.

He particularly was concerned over the fact that ground crews had to work on engines "that were very hot" with radioactivity.

He said that, as it turned out, even changing a spark plug was dangerous after the tests. This, he said, was the sad part.

Beaujolais should be America's favorite wine

By Dan Berger Copley News Service

I like to write about Beaujolais because that means I have to drink some, and that is a prospect I love to contemplate. Especially when the weather turns warm, and i can chill down a bottle and have it outdoors with a light repast.

Beaujolais should be America's favorite wine because it falls within the guidelines that have made White Zinfandel, wine coolers, and champagne such hot items in recent years. That is, all of them are soft, easydrinking, quaffable wines, all may be chilled, and all of them are "fun" products intended for festive occasions, not somber, pontifical situations laden with

My first few meetings with Didier Mommessin were of the latter type. We would sample some of his older vintages of Clos de Tart, one of the most richly rewarding of all red Burgundies, and the setting was usually rather formal. I was lucky enough to meet with Mommessin once again the other day, but this time the topic was quaffing. He was in town for the purpose of unveiling his new 1985 single-vineyard estate Beaujolais - the so-called Cru Beaujolais.

Mommessin annually releases a traditional Beaujolais-Villages. as well as wines from the nine great Beaujolais "crus," or villages, that are rated as significantly better than the rest of the Beaujolais region. These are wines of charm and character, and although Mommessin's Beaujolais lack the worldwide fame of some producers, such as George Duboeuf, Mommessin in recent years has produced some of the most reliable wines made in the Beaujolais district.

Mommessin began the luncheon with a sampling of the 1985 white wines of his estate, and one of the most appealing of them was the 1985 Saint Veran Domaine de L'Eveque ($10), a marvelous wine made entirely of Chardonnay grapes. When served cold, the wine was tight, hard and closed, but as it warmed up, this delicate wine offered far more richness and complexity, with a lemony/spicy taste.

Mommessin said the wine represents excellent value, and he pointed out that in the coming months French White Burgundies should rise in price dramatically.

"If you like White Burgundy, you should buy them now." he said. "The prices are going up." The reason for that, he said, has to do with the size of the 1982 crop. It was huge and of mediocre quality. Moreover, the white wines of that vintage were released at a time - in 1984 when the French franc was weak, and thus worth less vis a vis the dollar.

So for more than a year, the 1982 White Burgundies were very low in price, and there followed the 1983s, which were opulently flavored and intense wines. Yet prices didn't immediately rise.

higher quality of the 1985 harvest will surely force prices up, and that may be seen in the suggested retail price of the 1985 Mommessin Pouilly Fuisse

But the smaller size and

- $21.75! (It is very good wine, but rarely have I seen Pouilly Fuisse selling for that much money.)

The Mommessin Beaujolais, however, are not expensive. Here are my comments on the wines in the order in which they were tasted, from lightest to heaviest:

Beaujolais-Villages ($5.50): Like a small step up from a Nouveau Beaujolais, light, very grapey-floral, and loaded with cherries in the aroma.

Brouilly, Chateau de Briante ($8): More intense, with a cranberry aroma and a spicy finish.

Chiroubles, Chateau de Raousset ($8.50): More elegant, refined, delicate. Good acid, may improve with another six months in bottle.

Morgon, Domaine de Lathevalle ($8.25): Also elegant in aroma, with a full-bodied taste, and a bit hot. Somewhat disappointing, considering the greatness in the other wines. Julienas, Domaine de Conseillere ($8.25): Now, here is what Cru Beaujolais is all about: big, ripe fruit aroma, chewy sort of taste. A marvelous effort from a property that sits higher on a ridge than all the other Julienas growing regions.

Saint-Amour, Domaine de Monreve ($8.50): Soft, fresh, delicate - an alluring wine with a romantic name.

Fleurie, Clos de la Roilette ($9.50): Opulent fruit that smells more like a traditional red Burgundy rather than a Beaujolais. "This is barely a Beaujolais wine," said Mommessin. The cherry aoma and intense taste are offset by a vague hint that the wine was aged in oak. (It was, briefly.)

Coprophagy in dogs can be controlled

By R.G. Elmore, D.V.M. Copley News Service

Q. Our 8-month-old Irish setter has developed the disgusting habit of eating her own bowel movements.

We allow the dog to spend a lot of time indoors with us and it is getting increasingly difficult to be affectionate with her.

What can we do about this annoying behavior? Why does our dog do this? Is it normal?

A. Eating of one's own stool, or coprophagy, is relatively common in young dogs. The cause is unknown and it is also unknown why some dogs develop this habit and others do not.

There are many theories for this behavior, including boregom, nutritional imbalances and diseases. Lack of digestive enzymes, unbalanced diets and vitamin and mineral deficiencies have been suggested as likely causes. Vitamin B deficiency is the most likely deficiency related to this condition.

Coprophagy has been seen in dogs with digestive upsets such as gastritis, pancreatic disease and gum infections. Dogs with rabies often attempt to eap their own feces. Puppies that are teething or are parasitized with digestive tract worms often are stool eaters.

It has been stated by many animal authorities that coprophagy may be normal in dogs - that it is nature's way of achieving a more efficient absorption of nutrients from the diet. This is also believed to be true of rabbits. A dog eating its own feces may be a vestigial wolf spirit - the spirit to be an efficient and vigorous hunter and scavenger.

Whether normal or not, and whether it is or is not a leftover from ancestral days, it is disgusting to most modern-day dog lovers.

The first step to control coprophagy in a dog is a thorough physical examination by a veterinarian to eliminate any possible physical causes. At the time of the examination, a fresh stool sample should be taken for examination for the edgs of digestive tract worms.

Your veterinarian can review and evaluate the diet your dog is currently consuming If no physical or nutritional reasons are discovered during the examination, behaviorchanging techniques should be tried. The dog should be disciplined whenever it is seen eating its stool. Often this is all that is required.

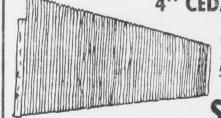

Another effective way to control coprophagy is to clean up the dog's stools immediately following defecation. Of course, this requires your accompanying the dog on her jaunts about the yard.
